

ABSTRACT

The present invention is directed to a protein matrix wherein biological samples, preferably proteins, are placed on a solid support. The arrays are reacted with identifier
5 molecules, such as antibodies, to correlate the gene expression manifested in the samples with the identifier molecule. The reaction produces a gene expression or protein expression profile for the biological state from which the samples are derived. The arrays are used for research, drug discovery, and the detection of disease.